I. Annotate any FOUR of the following choosing TWO from Poetry and TWO from Drama : 4 × 4 = 16

- (a) And mark in every face I meet
Marks of weakness, marks of woe.
- (b) Of that colossal wreck, boundless and bare,
The lone and level sands stretch far away
- (c) Heard melodies are sweet, but those unheard
Are sweeter; therefore, ye soft pipes, play on;
- (d) Thy firmness makes my circle just,
And makes me end where I begun.
- (e) Let me have men about me that are fat;
Sleek-headed men and such as sleep o' nights:
- (f) Let us be sacrificers, but not butchers, Caius.
- (g) Cowards die many a time before their deaths;
The valiant never taste of death but once.
- (h) Fill, Lucius, till the wine o'erswell the cup;
I cannot drink too much of Brutus' love.

We all know what we mean by a “good” man. The ideal good man does not drink or smoke, avoids bad language, converses in the presence of men only exactly as he would if there were ladies present, attends church regularly and holds the correct opinion on all subjects. He has a wholesome horror of wrong-doing and realizes that it is our painful duty to castigate sin. He has a still greater horror of wrong thinking, and considers it the business of the authorities to safeguard the young against those who question the wisdom of the views generally accepted by middle-aged successful citizens. Apart from his professional duties, at which he is assiduous, he spends much time in good works: he may encourage patriotism and military training; he may promote industry, sobriety and virtue among wage earners and their children by seeing to it that failures in these respects receive due punishment; he may be a trustee of a university and prevent an ill-judged respect for learning from allowing the employment of professors with subversive ideas. Above all, of course, his “morals” in the narrow sense must be irreproachable.
